rarely seen photographs that should delight even the most jaded Disneylanders who think they've read and seen it all before. Curious fans can still find Welte Orchestrions — massive coin-operated instruments with wind pipes, drums and cymbals purchased by Walt Disney — in the Main Street Penny Arcade and the Frontierland Pioneer Mercantile shop, according to the book. "When I was writing the book, I was living with him and we talked shop 24 hours a day," Carriker Smothers said. "I can't write about Walt or read about Wal wall behind the water fountain was wheeled out into the middle of Main Street U.S.A. during the construction of Disneyland for reference by masons. Ever wondered what it feels like to be stuck on a yo-yo? His name is buzzing around in his beloved Magic Kingdom all the time." When Carriker Smothers wasn't in a library, she spent her time writing at Disneyland — firing up her laptop on a Main Street U.S.A. park bench, the Mark Twain Riverboat landing, at Cafe Orleans Square, next to the Casey Ir. Circus Train in Fantasyland, outside the Enchanted Tiki Room and in Walt Disney's personal box at the Golden Horseshoe. "He wanted to ensure we had a comfortable place to relax between the five or six shows we did every day." Many small touches and details hand-selected by Walt Disney are scattered throughout Disneyland. "He thought kids might use the excuse that if he could do it, then they could try to get into his park without paying." Carriker Smothers pays off the charming tale of childhood chicanery with a full circle comeuppance — all courtesy of the Walt Disney Archives, Ouotes and photos in the book were culled from hours of research and hundreds of sources, including the Walt Disney Hometown Museum. "He wanted to be sure there would be no reason to drop wrappers on the ground," Carriker Smothers writes in the book. "Any detail — and Walt loved details — just adds to the story of Walt Disney sneaking into the Fairmont amusement park in Kansas City with his childhood friend William Rust. "Notice the patterns of bricks are far from identical, as they represent the different styles found on the walls and around windows on the thoroughfare," Carriker Smothers writes. The book reveals that remnants of a precursor to the private members-only Club 33 can still be found on either side of the Plaza Inn from a hidden hideaway called the Hideout where Walt Disney entertained VIPs. The Hideout's original triptych windows are still visible across from Disneyland's first aid station while the Hideout's stained glass door can be seen next to the restaurant.
